The Spanish text translates as follows I write in a German book, to which the woman I love has written the following phrase: "I am learning Spanish, and have been studying for one month." Lately I have started learning the language, and I can understand a little of what the woman I love is saying, and at the same time I can read the German book in which I am writing. As a result of my new learning, I am aware that in my capacity as a teacher I can use these two resources (the book and the woman) to allow the students to see and make use of their sources of help in the following sentence: I write in a German book, to which the woman I love has written the following phrase: "I am learning Spanish, and have been studying for one month." I, therefore, want to know whether it is possible to use the term "I am learning Spanish" as a separate item in a sentence and to use it just as I am using the verb "to learn", that is, to indicate the learning of a new language. Using the verb "to learn", and an additional item in the sentence, as the basis for my question, I would make the following sentence. I write in a German book, to which the woman I love has written the following phrase: "I am learning Spanish, and have been studying for one month." I, therefore, want to know whether it is possible to use the term "I am learning Spanish" as a separate item in a sentence and to use it just as I am using the verb "to learn", that is, to indicate the learning of a new language. Well, I have done what the review is asking. But I thought that I can do it better with a few other ways. So I have done it, and it is not a question to be afraid of doing it. So let's talk about it. I would change the sentence into: I write in a German book, to which the woman I love has written the following phrase:

"I am learning Spanish, and I have been studying for one month."
Since the woman is also writing to her, I must correct the sentence with the conjunction "and."
