It had been since the first episode aired, when my mom and I started watching after it on television. (And, oh, how I just love me some TV going back in time and talking about my childhood!) The wonderfully cast Sarah Michelle Gellar has since jumped from the TV screen to the big screen, and now plays a different character — albeit one who doesn't wear make-up, but like, wears a little dress. And I'm totally with her. So when I saw The Video is Unrated, which director Natalie Portman released in February 2010, I couldn't wait to dive in and watch it. It centers around, as the name suggests, a 1992 video cassette that shows various clips from Buffy's first season, as well as a few from the spin-off show, Angel. As the Portman-directed videocassette plays, it's revealed that it's really the entire intro sequence for Buffy — with Gellar showing up in Buffy's body. And she looks like a different person. Whedon's dialogue and staging give it an energetic look, but we also see hints of the mature, almost sarcastic language we get in later seasons. Check it out after the jump. As part of Portman's 10th year celebration, the video is available online for a limited time. [via Independent]Fredericks Grove Frederick's Grove is a neighbourhood in Halifax, Nova Scotia. The Government has in the past mandated that safety equipment should be available, but this has never been applied. The same applies to other countries. One of the major weaknesses of this bill is that it's not mandatory. It's being forced upon us, and it's already causing harm to people, but no one has been made to take action. The bill even contains the potential for criminalisation of those who don't comply. We can't believe it. It just shows that we don't have any rights at all. It's a very dangerous piece of legislation, and we're going to protest it until they repeal it. In the meantime, we'll try to raise awareness about it and about the harm that it's doing. We've also noticed that there are several new laws coming through which are in effect, but not yet official, such as mandatory reporting of child abuse and extra police powers to make themselves legal in emergency situations. We're also hearing stories about the lockdown of people on the Islands, who aren't allowed to travel to the mainland, although they can still go into the community and leave. We're hearing stories of people who have been given a list of things to do, including daily exercise, for example. People are complaining they don't have access to health services, and what about essential services such as water? We think many people are in a much better position to understand what is happening than what we have seen on the evening news. So we encourage all the media to take the opportunity to use their influence to inform the public and to hold politicians to account in this way. We understand there is a lot of panic, and we are aware that many people have had no contact with their children and are worried about them. But we urge everyone to keep calm and work with the best interests of the community at heart. That includes looking after your own health and wellbeing, and that of your family and friends, as well as those of your neighbours and the environment. This is not a time to panic. People are often saying things like, "The GP is my friend" 3ef4e8ef8d
