The Burden of Overcoming Barriers to Breastfeeding at Time of Birth in a Large Urban Primary Care Practice. Objective: To determine the prevalence of breastfeeding among women birthing in a large, urban hospital and to identify factors associated with initiation of breastfeeding and breastfeeding at discharge. Methods: Retrospective cohort study of all women delivering in a single urban hospital between April 1, 2016 and May 31, 2016. Infants born to non-white mothers or mothers not born in the United States were excluded from analyses. Initiation and duration of breastfeeding were assessed at time of birth, and outcomes were assessed at time of discharge. Results: Of 2,569 women delivering, 7% initiated breastfeeding, and 17% initiated breastfeeding in the operating room. Initiation of breastfeeding increased from 8% in primiparous to 30% in multiparous women (p 2d92ce491b
