CT pulmonary angiography (CTPA) is a well-established imaging modality used for the detection of pulmonary embolism (PE). The prevalence of infective endocarditis (IE) has increased with the increasing use of invasive procedures and device implants, leading to concern for the risk of contrast-induced nephropathy with CTPA. To determine whether there are CTPA findings indicative of IE or other noninfective etiologies. A retrospective review of all CTPA exams for suspected PE between October 2012 and July 2014 was performed. Inclusion criteria included the diagnosis of suspected PE and no preexisting valve disease. The study group included all patients with IE and the noninfective control group was matched to the study group for mean age, sex, and diabetes. The CTPA findings were compared between the two groups, and logistic regression was performed to evaluate for factors associated with IE. A total of 2,001 examinations were included in the study, of which 33 (1.6
