I'm good at maintaining models that is why i would like to become an artist. i also like to make models of my own.

Windows 10. [FS2004]-[FSX]M Vol.1,€ Does anyone else have any tips for geometries that are "phantom-like"? I'm having a really hard time getting the geometry of some things (e.g. the ground on the back side of the dragon) to look realistic (to me, at least). I'm working on doing a bunch of particle effects, and I want the particles to "breathe" or "sway" in the wind, but I'm having a really hard time getting them to do that. I'm using bender and it seems like I need to move the geometry around to achieve that, but I'm not sure how to do that. A: I have been working on trees for quite a while now and I am also a fan of being able to make them move and sway in the wind. First things first One thing that I have found is that my trees are much more realistic if they have a "primary" axis of rotation. This is the axis of the tree that always stays straight up and down. When using a tree, I always try to make it a cylinder, because it is easy to change the axis of rotation of the cylinder. Second, when I work on the tree, I start by creating a plane. The plane is located under the tree. The plane is only there for work with the wood part of the tree, because later on I will be gluing it in the modeler. In blender, go to cycles>create plane, select the plane created from the cylinder.

After you have made the plane, you can start to work on the trees. Now I only work on the wood part of the tree. I
