Once I could go to the store and buy a harmonics for the price of a cheapo Sony ProMedia Corder. Ive been searching for years for a real Timecode Corder like the new Sony and I was able to find it. In just a minute. On the google. And it was super easy too. Harmonic ProMedia Carbon Coder 319135728 Portable on Amazon A: According to the other two answers, yes, you can: There are lots of professional corders for sale. (e.g. not on ebay) Corders are not connected to the unit via USB (so, no, you cannot transfer the stream to another computer) You can physically connect a corder to the VU meter You can find online converters that convert the RGB to the YUV used by the VU meter VU meters can convert the RGB data to a suitable stream for further processing. There are lots of timecode decoders that can decode the timecode into a stream that can be further processed. All those options are easy to find by Googling, but if you prefer to look at some more examples, I can provide some links for you. PATIENT EPISODE PREMIERES: "Getting the Facts: Diabetes" As many of you have likely heard, we are going to be doing a series of patient episodes on diabetes (or prediabetes). I think it is an important topic that impacts more than half a million of our patients. The first is coming up on Monday, April 8, 2017, and you can view the full episode here. There are 5 topics and I have chosen the most difficult one, which is medication. I think this is the toughest because we are dealing with an autoimmune disease, which is often tough to deal with. So here it is! I hope you enjoy. Stay tuned for the next one! Are you ready for the next episode? CLICK HERE for access to our other patient episodes. Oh, and if you like what you see here, please consider sharing this with your friends. I appreciate it.#!/usr/bin/env python # Copyright (c) 2012 Google Inc.
