The 2013 motorcycle police patrol in Sri Lanka became the first in the world to ride with an LGBT identity. Lt. Col. Lakmal Chandana, the commanding officer of the Sri Lanka Police Force, said "If I had to sum up the whole situation, I would say the police are undergoing a structural change on how we operate in order to make our country a peaceful and safe place to live and work for everybody. And that includes all races, religions, and sexual orientation." In addition to Chandana's story, many people were surprised to learn that transgender individuals within the country were even able to find jobs as human-trafficking victims. The story is one of many from around the world that focus on the ways that a country's laws can affect people based on sexual orientation or gender. In addition to the oft-seen battle of marriage equality and state-by-state legislation, people in many other countries do have a chance at living openly and happily, even if they are not often celebrated or recognized. The show's host Jonathan Van Meter tells the story of Ashok Kumar Mangaldas, a Delhi-based activist and founder of Samvedna, a support group for transgender Indians and people with "other gender issues." In 2005, Mangaldas wrote to the Indian president begging him to acknowledge and work on the problems of transgender people in the country. In response to his protest, President Pratibha Patil signed an executive order that labeled transgender individuals as "Eunuchs," stripping them of many of their rights. Mangaldas continued to work on the issue, though he eventually left India in 2008 because of political persecution. Van Meter talks to him by phone about how the country's transgender population has changed since the executive order, along with Mangaldas' childhood memories of celebrating Holi. In India, Mangaldas tells Van Meter, "Each year, we hold this festival of the colors and the entire country gets together and we have this big festival. And the transgender community has their own way of celebrating it. We put make-up, get dressed up, put on our jewelry, and dance and celebrate in our own way." Mangaldas says he believes he is in danger to return to India. The executive order was rescinded in 2010, but Van Meter is aware that even in 2012, "there are transgender people in bars and clubs who are being denied admission

Low-cost telephone cards from the Philippines are going for just US$1.95 ($1.65) a pop. Spending an extra one or two dollars on such a card can make a big difference when you're traveling around the world. Long-distance calling rates in the Philippines are among the cheapest in the world, which means a lot of locals are making the most of a very affordable telephone service. Getting used to mobile phones "The first thing we need to do is stop getting used to mobile phones. We've been accustomed to a landline telephone number for the past 15 or 20 years," said Ann M. Jacobi, a travel expert at Moody's Investor Services. Keeping in touch while traveling is a lot easier if you have a landline, Jacobi told Business Insider. Getting used to mobile phones and a country's Internet regulations takes a little time. "There are many challenges to overcome," Jacobi said, "including what not to say on the phone, how to say it in a foreign language, not realizing that using the Internet at a coffee shop won't necessarily mean getting online with the same mobile plan as you do back home." Image: Ann M. Jacobi/@moodys How to make the most of low-cost telephone cards Buying a low-cost telephone card from the Philippines is like using one of the most common features in your smartphone — WhatsApp. Other apps may cost a little bit more, but they can be a lot more convenient when you're trying to keep in touch with family or friends back home. "WhatsApp has been the most successful mobile messaging service since 2011. It didn't take long to figure out how to make this work," Jacobi said. "The U.S. remains the global hub for messaging, and other options become more popular in regions where they are more prevalent — particularly for businesses or for travel." "While an American mobile carrier like Verizon, AT&T, or T-Mobile won't necessarily facilitate the use of WhatsApp — unless you want to pay the roaming fees — this is easy to use anywhere in the world," Jacobi said. You will be able to use WhatsApp on any SIM card Some of the most common companies that sell low-cost telephone cards are Mindanao Visayas, with Telkoms — also a national tel
