link to download A360 on Windows 10: Dynamic MR imaging of laryngeal muscles following functional electrical stimulation. To assess laryngeal muscle activation using dynamic MR imaging. Three subjects with normal larynges were evaluated for presence of striated muscle using dynamic MR imaging in the neutral position. After applying functional electrical stimulation, the subjects were brought to the maximal active position. All larynges had at least five anterior and five posterior laryngeal muscle strands, including laryngeal adductors. Activation of the anterior laryngeal muscles induced lateralization of the hyoid bone that was associated with an increased signal intensity in the vocal folds. Activation of the posterior laryngeal muscles caused anterior movement of the hyoid bone and attenuation of the signal intensity of the vocal folds. Activation of the laryngeal muscles was associated with indentation of the anterior walls of the postcricoid space, causing minimal change in the configuration of the hyoid bone. Functional electrical stimulation
