Ever feel that you just can't pull off a seamless shot of your family with the holiday lights on? You may not have enough time, or the lighting isn't quite right. But that's okay — the following recipe gives you exactly the right lighting you need to photograph the mood and the action.

Before you begin: Get a professional camera — high-resolution DSLRs have very high ISO speeds, so you may as well use them. Use a reflector — a good multi-function light with a bright reflector will be your best friend. The setup: Place the strobe between the lightsource and the background. Avoid using flash in the background, it may mess with the background color.

The shot: Place your subject in the foreground. Place your lightsource behind the subject. If you use an off-camera strobe, aim it at the shadow side of your subject. Make sure to keep your subject in focus by using a wide aperture. Aperture priority mode will help you control depth of field. Aperture control is independent of shutter speed, so the longer you keep it open, the deeper the background will be in focus. Use continuous focus to keep all the people in focus. After you're done: Happy shooting! FAQ Q: What is a DSLR? A: A digital Single Lens Reflex camera is a single-lens reflex camera that uses a single lens in front of a digital sensor that controls the amount of light reaching the sensor. Q:

Why would I use a reflector? A: A reflector is a useful tool to reflect or bounce light. Q: Why can I hear the flash right after the camera is turned on? A: The flash is on, and ready to fire, even though the camera is off. Q: How do I know if my subject has been adequately exposed? A: The camera should display an easily decipherable message on the screen. The number in the message should be between 30 and 60. It's a product that garnered a lot of attention among new and veteran drivers alike.

Lippert's drag racing capable FWD conversion offered a simple, low-cost racing installation for those who wanted more performance in a stock vehicle. But outside of racing circles, such a system can be quite expensive. MORE
