Having taken precautions from the beginning is one way to keep yourself safe, but you're likely to encounter times when you aren't online, and then you need to rely on whatever you've stored. That's where the password manager can help. Earlier this month, we took a look at PasswordLab, which is a feature-rich password manager, that you can sync up with your phone, tablet, or PC, making for an accessible app. It's a powerful app that's ideal for those who need to manage a lot of different passwords, but it also comes with a few drawbacks. When you're using PasswordLab, you're presented with the option to create a new profile, when you're asked to fill in a few fields, including the URL of the website you wish to link it to and the specific account's user name and password. The latter two are the main focus, as PasswordLab will remember them for you, but they're not present in any sort of format that makes things clear. There's an option to save them, but what you're saving is the exact text. It's not marked and the only way you know what it says is by looking at the field. And once you've set up your profile, you won't be able to access it. If you're going to get a password manager, something that's good to be used often 09e8f5149f
