Home Page: A: When you used Firefox, you already installed a password manager. By default, it will remember your login details for all websites and you won't have to remember your user and password for every website. But if you have a bad memory, you can install a standalone password manager to do the job, such as Lastpass. Triggering receptors expressed on myeloid cells (TREM-like) are a newly recognized family of transmembrane proteins that contain an immunoreceptor tyrosine-based activation motif (ITAM)-like domain. The ITAM domain is only conserved in a subclass of cytokine receptors, the immunoglobulin superfamily, and is found only in those receptors that are expressed on myeloid cells. In contrast, TREM-1, the prototype of the TREM family, does not have this motif and is expressed on human myeloid cells. Despite its central role in mediating inflammation, the consequences of its activation are poorly understood. The overall goal of this proposal is to define the physiological role of TREM-1. In Aim 1, a TREM-1 null mouse line will be generated to study the role of the receptor in regulating acute inflammatory responses. Mice deficient in TREM-1 should have a spontaneous inflammatory disease similar to that of interleukin (IL)-10 knockout mice. Both models should be susceptible to acute inflammation induced by sterile abscess formation. In Aim 2, a TREM-1 knockout mouse line will be used to study TREM-1's role in regulating chronic inflammatory disease, such as atherosclerosis. TREM-1's role in atherosclerosis is presumed to be different from its effects in acute inflammation because macrophages, which drive both inflammation and atherosclerosis, express TREM-1. In addition, inflammation induced by chronic inflammation is less affected by IL-10 than the acute inflammation induced by sterile abscess formation. Aim 2 will test the hypothesis that TREM-1 regulates susceptibility to atherosclerosis by targeting monocyte-macrophage/dendritic cell-derived cytokines. Aim 3 will characterize the normal function of TREM-1. Macrophages from mice deficient in TREM-1 will be studied to determine whether TREM-1 is required for normal function, including phagocytic activity and
