Bush visited with a fire in the monument during his "4 Points" tour, telling volunteers working to save it, "I know what it's like to be broke." Bush, the George W. Bush and Jenna Bush, the George H.W. Bush and Barbara Bush, Barbara Pierce Bush, and family members who were accompanying the former president through their four-day tour on Wednesday, arrived at the World War II memorial in Washington to meet the chief of the National Park Service and National Park Police and enjoy a private lunch with some volunteers working with the Eisenhower Memorial Foundation, which is developing the memorial. The group has been working to raise $4 million to fund the memorial, which has had a fight to get off the ground. To celebrate the progress of the fundraising, the family has been meeting with volunteers to discuss how their $6 million donation to the effort will be used. Bush, 92, "met with the chief of the National Park Service and the National Park Police to thank the volunteers and deliver a gift of $6 million to the Eisenhower Memorial Foundation for construction of the memorial," according to a statement from the former president's office. "The President also wants to thank the Corps of Engineers for their work on the site and crews working on the memorial." The former president's visit is the first for his four-person group to the memorial in what is scheduled to be a three-day tour through D.C., after stops in Maine and New York City. President George W. Bush and his wife, Laura Bush, will host the former president and his wife, Barbara, at their vacation home in Maine in early October before he returns home to Texas. "I know what it's like to be broke," Bush told the group as he told them about the life he had growing up. "I remember being broke." The former president also took a moment to discuss his two-term presidency, which ended in 1992

The application of a 2% sulfamide plus 2% carboxypolymethylene and 2% cholic acid resin as a gastrointestinal tract cleanser in the presence or absence of an adjuvant (Aquaphor) in dogs with naturally occurring gastritis. Canine gastritis may be associated with loss of appetite, vomiting, weight loss, depression, hematemesis, and melena. Additionally, gastritis may disrupt normal gastrointestinal tract function, thereby affecting nutrient absorption and digestion. A study was designed to determine the effectiveness and safety of 3 commercially available gastrointestinal cleansers on canine gastritis. Ninety-six dogs with gastritis of at least 2 weeks' duration were assigned to 1 of 3 groups: 1) 2% sulfamide plus 2% carboxypolymethylene + 2% cholic acid, 2) 2% sulfamide plus 2% carboxypolymethylene + 2% cholic acid + adjuvant, and 3) chlorhexidine gluconate - rinsed twice daily. Gastric pH and serum pepsinogen level (sPGL) were measured at the start and end of treatment. Gastrointestinal tract health was evaluated before and after treatment with a 4-point hematologic and serum biochemical profile. The most common lesions seen on endoscopy were gastric ulceration, vascular ectasia, and gastric erosive esophagitis. Gastric pH of dogs treated with the sulfamide + carboxypolymethylene + cholic acid adjuvant 82138339de
