A few first-rate movies, like Micromen!, got a few releases, while others, like The Bullet Man, never got released. New American Cinema picked up steam in the 60's, expanding the influence of independent American cinema. Comic book adaptations In 1954 DC Comics launched the Blackhawk series, starring the first African American superhero. The success of the character led to the creation of similarly themed characters like Hourman, and numerous imitators in the 1950s, like Robin Hood and The Green Hornet. The 1960s was the beginning of the Silver Age of Comic Books, and 1970 saw the publication of one of the first seminal works of modern comics criticism, the book The Comics Code Authority, edited by Bernie B. Reynolds and written by John Stanley. A.S. Neimeyer edited the second edition in 1972, which was an important collection of criticism and analysis of the vast, then largely unexplored, comics medium. In 1966 the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) approached Warren Publishing to print a special edition of its publication that would be sold as pornography and would have the addition of comics inside the book, but this was deemed inappropriate for the agency. This did not stop the CIA from buying pornographic comic books and distributing them to select agents. TV adaptations In the early 1960s, a number of popular television series from the 1950s were adapted into comic books. The Green Hornet television series, with its light-hearted, fantastic tales, was one of the most successful of these. In the 1990s, in the wake of the comic book industry's demise, television versions of such successful comic book properties as Batman, Superman and Spider-Man became popular. Wart
