My intention was to present a new technique which I think is not only a new technique, but a new reality (??) for artists to get a "kick". By kicking, I mean that it's a new way of doing things, one which I believe is more natural and a lot of times (not all) a lot more fun. I really liked that 3D object art you did in the example on the poster and I think you've got the idea of how to do this. I've been trying it on a project for a few days and I liked the results. If you like the results, there's many ways to get the results. (Youtube, ShaderBolt, Photoshop, paint, raw image editor) No, that's not true, isn't it? Yes, we can type words but we can't dictate or copy words. You can dictate but you can't copy. You can dictate and click a mouse at the same time so that is a point but I can't type any words from a website to the computer or copy a word that I hear so you're wrong. When you
