With GIMP, you can create an image or modify it by manipulating layers. These layers are stored in a separate file with a special file type and can contain text and other information, or be empty. # The Layers Panel The Layers panel is used to modify an image by moving and resizing layers and to add new layers. The image will appear differently when you move and resize layers, and by changing the transparency of layers. As you work with layers, you can preview the image on the Layers panel. When you move layers, the image in the Layers panel changes. You have more control over layers when using the Layers panel than when using the Photoshop toolbox. Figure 14-1 shows a Layers panel. Q: How to resolve conflicts when merging pull request We have two small commits which work together to change a file. file.c file.h When we try to push to the remote repository, we get a conflict. Merge the remote changes into Local? Merge the Local changes into the remote? I'm a bit lost on how to handle these cases. Can you help me decide which one is the best way to resolve the issue? A: Generally, the merge option is what you want. At a high level, the idea is to say "These are the changes on the remote that were checked into the remote branch." In your case, the remote already included the first commit, so you'd want to perform a merge to incorporate the first commit into your local working copy, and then carry on with your work on the updated file. Marcion of Sinope Marcion of Sinope, also called Marcian of Sinope (; fl. early first century), was a 1st-century Christian apologist. He was a native of Sinope, Pontus. In Alexandria he had a proselyte, Alexander. He was also a disciple of Theophilus of Antioch. Marcion's 95 work-treatises, followed by a few fragments, constitute the largest body of literature in the whole sphere of Christian apologetics, so far as antiquity has reached. In view of the large number of works assigned to this Marcion, and the constant wars with which he had to struggle, it is almost incredible that the Roman pontiffs recognized him as the author of only five of the works. However, the authority of the official Roman Church implies not only that he was the author of all the 95 treatises, but that the ones which he did not write are mere forgeries. After a long struggle with his opponents, Marcion, in 138, was forced to go into exile in the Orient, where he wrote his 85 treatises under the nickname of "Friend of God." Marcion's chief apologetic work is the work known as the "Antitheses" (ἀντιθέσεις, "Contradictions"). In this work he exposed and maintained the common dogmas of the Christians, as he saw them, against the attacks of the heretics. This is the treatment of the fundamental dogmas of Christianity—the personality and
