Ultratools is an easy to use song editor. It is designed to aid users in creating their very own Ultrastar songs. The program is also capable of editing existing songs. Three types of notes, complete with their corresponding lyrics The software allows users to work with standard, freestyle and gold notes. These are added by using the top buttons. A nice feature is that notes can be merged and split. Another interesting function is that users can insert the lyrics while working on the song notes. Each note receives its very own lyric; This is where the split and merge notes functions really pay off! Users can personalize their file by filling in many metadata fields (like author, genre, year of production and Bpm). Songs are saved in standard TXT format, which makes it very easy to transfer them around. A clean and bi-lingual interface The interface is well suited for the job at hand. The bottom part of the main window is occupied by the actual work area. This is where notes will be added or removed. The three types of notes available to users are displayed using their respective colors, which makes it very easy to spot errors. An interesting feature, although probably unintended, is that a few French phrases seem to have ended up in the main window, alongside their more common English counterparts. This will surely be fixed in future versions. A very simple, easy to use and practical resource Ultratools Editor Reviews: Ultratools Editor (part 2) by user Quantum. The mutagenicity of mammalian food and feed constituents. Food and feed constituents are almost universally present in the environment at low concentrations. These constituents, present at low concentrations in food or feed, can be detected at various sites, such as air, water and soil, and include many non-genotoxic chemicals, which are considered to be important in the aetiology of human cancers, as well as many mutagens and carcinogens. Of the known environmental contaminants present in food, feed and water, it is the mutagens and carcinogens that present the greatest risk to human health and the environment. The appearance of new mutagens or carcinogens in the environment and their increased use as a result of technological developments present a challenge to the food industry and regulatory authorities. Recent developments in the laboratory have greatly improved our understanding of the mutagenic and carcinogenic potential of many chemicals, but these developments will only be fully exploited if the required information is available to the food and feed industry, scientific and regulatory communities. This paper considers some of the approaches currently being used to assess the mutagenicity and carcinogenicity of food and feed constituents, and the implications of these approaches on decision making and risk assessment. Elevated erythrocyte pyruvate kinase activity in sickle cell disease and aplastic anaemia. Erythrocyte pyruvate kinase activity was investigated in normal subjects, patients with hemoglobin SS, sickle cell trait, beta-thalassaemia, iron deficiency, and aplastic anaemia. In normal subjects, the mean value for pyruvate kinase activity was 36.2 +/- 2.3 U/g Hb; values for all patients with sickle cell disease were similar to those for normal subjects (mean, 42.5 +/- 3.4 U/g Hb; P = 0.003), except for patients with hemoglobin SS (mean, 43.2 +/- 4.8 U/g Hb; P = 0.02). Pyruvate kinase activity was elevated in all patients with aplastic anaemia (mean, 57.5 +/- 5.4 U/g Hb; P less than 0.001), and mean activity for patients with iron deficiency was also higher than that for normal subjects (P less than 0).
