II. Effects of sodium dodecyl sulfate on phosphatidylcholine transferase. The effects of sodium dodecyl sulfate on phosphatidylcholine transferase activity were studied using both purified and crude microsomal preparations from rat liver. By measuring the hydrolysis of sn-1-monopalmitoylglycerophosphorylcholine in the presence of various concentrations of sodium dodecyl sulfate it was found that 50 microM sodium dodecyl sulfate inhibits the enzyme by 50% and that the enzyme is inactivated at 0.0025% (w/v) with 6 min. Maximum loss of activity was observed at 0.01% (w/v) with a time course of 4 min. The molecular weight of the enzyme in its native form was determined to be 97 000 and that after treatment with 0.01% (w/v) sodium dodecyl sulfate 80 000 by Sephadex G-100 gel filtration and by sucrose density gradient centrifugation. The enzyme was found to bind to the Sepharose 6B matrix. By sucrose density gradient centrifugation, we estimated the ratio of enzyme activity to protein. In the presence of 0.02% (w/v) sodium dodecyl sulfate, the ratio of specific activity to protein increased significantly. Addition of 10 microM Ca²⁺ to the enzyme preparation results in a loss of approximately 50% of the transferase activity. The results obtained suggest that the ionic characteristics and the stability of transferase are somewhat different from the membrane-bound phospholipase A₂.
