We were thrilled when the Half-Life Haze AOSP launcher was finally released by the Half-Life Haze CyanogenMod team. The Haze Android game is quite short and is definitely worth trying out. It's a game with a simple premise; you are standing on a small piece of land that slowly glows, as it gets colored by different kinds of weather and time of day. You must explore a giant castle which, according to the developers, was meant to be some sort of giant laboratory. When you reach the end of the castle, you can try out another mini-game where you must roll a ball into a basket at the other end. The game can be played in both portrait or landscape orientation and the controls are very easy to use. One feature that we found rather convenient was the option to replay the previous level in its entirety, which would prevent you from starting over from the beginning or playing a new level in the same spot. With only three levels to play through, we found the entire game to be a pretty fun little addition to the Android ecosystem. Technical Field The present invention generally relates to flash memory devices and in particular to a flash memory system having a nonvolatile memory device formed in a stack. 2. Description of the Related Art Flash memory is a form of non-volatile memory that can be electrically erased and reprogrammed. Unlike other forms of non-volatile memory such as EEPROM (electrically erasable programmable read-only memory) the memory of a flash memory device can be erased or “programmed” in large blocks instead of one byte at a time. Flash memory is commonly used in portable electronic products such as cell phones, digital cameras, and music players because it is a non-volatile memory that doesn't require a steady power source to retain its memory cells. Flash memory is also popular because it is the most dense form of non-volatile memory. Flash memory devices typically include arrays of memory cells that are grouped into memory blocks. Each of the memory blocks is comprised of a plurality of pages that are arranged in a matrix, where each page includes a plurality of flash memory cells that are arranged in a row and column format. Each page can be accessed or “read” or “programmed” by outputting a unique address that corresponds to the page within the memory block that is to be read or programmed. FIG. 1 is a top-down view of a conventional flash memory cell array 100. As illustrated, the conventional flash memory cell array 100 includes an array of flash memory cells 101-1 through 101-M and wordlines 103-1 through 103-N that are perpendicular to one another. The flash
