Almost one in five US consumers has credit card debt that exceeds $5,000, and more than one in three carries balances that approach $10,000, the report said. "Consumer debt is a burden on the US economy," said Trevor Stirling, Moody's Investors Service chief economist, in a statement. "This debt has made home buying and other major purchases more difficult, causing the US economy to grind to a halt. "In addition, the debt has reduced consumers' willingness to spend, and that has worsened the overall economy." The report, which was released on Tuesday, warned that the US debt, which stood at $13.4 trillion in July, could reach $16.3 trillion by year-end. The high level of debt has been a drag on the economy for a few years now, particularly with credit cards, where levels have climbed higher than a few years ago and have become the single biggest source of household debt. The average US household carried $11,651 in credit card debt at the end of last year, a nearly $3,000 jump from the end of 2010, according to the Federal Reserve. According to a study last year by the Center for Financial Services Innovation, some 60 per cent of Americans with credit card debt owe more than $10,000 and 23 per cent owe more than $25,000.
