Probably, you will think of a film like the one thatÂ .Q: Call method of abstract class that wasn't instantiated yet I have 3 classes: public abstract class Animal { public void go() { Console.WriteLine("Hello, I'm an abstract class.."); } } public class Cat : Animal { public override void go() { Console.WriteLine("Hello, I'm a cat.."); } } public class Dog : Animal { public override void go() { Console.WriteLine("Hello, I'm a dog.."); } } When I instantiate this abstract class I have no idea which subclass I will be using (Cat, Dog, Fish etc.) How can I access the go() method of the abstract class when I know only what subclass I will be using? In my case I would want to do this: Animal animal = new????() animal.go(); A: That is not possible - because the Animal can not know what subclass it will be instantiated (it's abstract). You can provide Animal with a function to create (or get from), which will implement the methods in Animal: class Animal { public static Animal Create(Func factoryFn) { var animal = factoryFn(); animal.go(); //works return animal; } public void go() { Console.WriteLine("Hello, 648931e174

Apolipoprotein E (APOE) is a major lipid carrier in brain, and APOE4 homozygotes are at high risk for developing sporadic AD. The proposed research will investigate the effects of overexpressing human APOE in neuronal and glial cells, which are the two main cell types of the central nervous system (CNS). Recombinant adeno-associated viral (AAV) vectors will be developed that express either wild-type APOE4 or APOE2, in addition to a fluorescent reporter protein. These AAV vectors will be used to infect either primary cultures of rat cortical and cerebellar neurons or immortalized glial cells derived from the same animals, to produce the following Aim 1.1. To demonstrate that
