Using the Help option Photoshop comes with help files that are normally found in the Help folder. If you don't find what you're looking for, you can go to the Help menu (as shown in Figure 6-2) and select Help. The Help menu includes the following options: * **Adobe Photoshop Help & Documentation:** As Adobe's own developers describe various features of Photoshop and their usage, this is the place for general reference. * **Search:** This option finds topics and subtopics within Photoshop's Help document. The search function is similar to Word's Find feature. * **Search by topic:** This searches only within the topic selected. * **Search by keyword:** This searches by complete word. * **Search within in this book:** This searches only within the chapters in this book. * **Text Box:** This opens a text box with a searchable text placeholder. You can search the text box or copy and paste the results. The Help menu provides two methods for searching through Photoshop's features. Text boxes and Help Menu search are both powerful tools, but each can be difficult to use. FIGURE 6-2: A simple illustration of

About the center The Sapienza-INMI study unit was founded in 2003 by the Sapienza University of Rome and the Italian Institute of Health (Istituto Superiore di Sanità -- ISS) to provide objective assessment of the morbidity related to blood product transfusion in the Northern Italian Region of Lombardy. The center is certified according to the criteria of the Italian Society of Haematology and Blood Transfusion and has been certified as a Reference Center for infectious diseases according to C.E.I.E.S. national programme, and to those of blood banking according to national and international systems. The center has been set up as a national network, providing reference centers for the diagnosis and surveillance of viral and bacterial transfusion transmissible infections (TTIs). The units responsible for the surveillance of TTI are sentinel networks located at 50 centers in the study area. These centers are part of the regional network consisting of ten units of reference for transfusion-transmitted infections (TTIs) and are involved in the organization and monitoring of the activities. The regional network of reference for TTIs comprises ten units of reference: these units are large in size and have a staff of about 50 employees, all trained in TTI diagnosis. The units are normally located in the sentinel centers, however can be shifted to any other hospital in the area, in case of difficulties in the diagnosis of a TTI. The ten Regional Units of TTI diagnosis are referred to the University Institute of Health "Sapienza-INMI" for the final diagnosis of the TTI. A team of at least two medical doctors, and two biologists, monitor the surveillance of TTIs in the sentinel centers and is responsible for the information to the regional network of reference as well as to the regional network of blood bank. The Regional Units of blood bank, at present, are at the ISS Institute in Rome, to guarantee the final diagnosis of the TTIs. The Regional Units of TTI diagnosis and Blood Bank communicate with the partners of the Centre through a daily correspondence and through meetings held several times a year. This web page documents the activities of the Unit of TTIs in the period from January 2006 to December 2009. The study has been carried out by researchers of the Department of Microbiology and Immunology Sapienza University of Rome, under the supervision of the TTI Section of the Tuscany TTI

Mosquitoes that carry the deadly West Nile virus could be active and spreading in Southern and Central Indiana from this weekend into October, the Indiana State Department of Health (ISDH) warns. "We're being proactive in checking and treating the disease," says ISDH Communicable Disease Bureau Director Patrick Erickson. "And we're monitoring the mosquitoes closely." Erickson says this year's "bomb-cyclone" weather pattern - tropical storms associated with fall weather systems - has presented scientists with ideal conditions for mosquito breeding. The agency is targeting particular families for mosquito monitoring and inspection. "Our focus is on homeowners, small businesses and property managers, because they're the people most likely to notice an increase in insect bites and nuisance mosquitoes," he says. Mosquitoes can transmit West Nile virus, and West Nile virus is transmitted
