The problem is that the code doesn't work as I would expect. I need to print out the children of each node. If they're not empty, show their content, and the children of childrens, etc. However, the variables don't work as they should when I want to print the tree. This is the code of the class 'Node': #ifndef NODE_H #define NODE_H #include #include #include "nodeabstree.h" class Node { public: Node(int element, int parent, Node **list = NULL); //void delete(); int getElement(); int getParent(); Node *getChildren(); Node *getLeft(); Node *getRight(); private: int m_element; int m_parent; Node **m_children; }; #endif And this is the constructor: #include "node.h" Node::Node(int element, int parent, Node **list) : m_element

Launch ControlÂ .Q: Zero copy vs non-zero copy Could some one explain in simple words what exactly are "zero copy" and "non-zero copy" and their difference. Thanks A: A "zero-copy" scenario would be a scenario where data is queued to/from a network for streaming and the data transfer can be enabled/disabled at any point in time. A "non-zero-copy" scenario would be a scenario where data is queued to/from a network for streaming and the data transfer can not be disabled. A common example would be an audio streaming scenario. A: A non-zero copy scenario means you are running a command line application as a user and you are sending data through pipes or sockets and then are waiting for a network response, including the return value
