It can be used to add to the selected area or to remove from it. The Lasso tool can be found under Select > Lasso, or in the Paint Bucket tool. You will need to use the Add to Current Selection option under the Lasso Tool menu option in the toolbar. The area to be selected is shown in yellow, and the Lasso tool is selected in green. Using the Add to Current Selection option makes the area selected as a shape and the Lasso tool fills that shape with white. If your color in the image is different from the colors of the selection, your selections will be slightly different shades of gray. Shapes can be manipulated easily using the Lasso tool. The selection can be dragged with two fingers to move the shape around, then pinch to zoom, or spread, or rotate. Based on a report from SEC Blog, the SEC has issued a statement in response to some of the hot topics coming out of the technology industry. The SEC hopes to remind individuals responsible for technology-related offerings that they are supposed to follow the same rules set for traditional investment offerings. Read the full text below "The SEC has learned that companies developing and offering new investment products should follow the same rules as traditional investment products, rather than attempt to leverage new technologies in ways that circumvent those rules and regulations," said Director of Enforcement for the Division of Trading and Markets Shana Keller, Ph.D. An SEC press release: "New investment products are not generally subject to the same rules or oversight as traditional securities, particularly when it comes to features designed to avoid oversight, such as unregulated trading. To protect investors from fraud and to promote certainty in the marketplace, new investment products must comply with the same regulatory requirements as products for which investors are familiar. Further, the Commission's rules governing the use of the word "investment" apply to all new products that offer speculative-grade investments with the expectation of multiple returns from their use, regardless of whether those products are securities or not. The Commission is committed to focusing its enforcement efforts on the most serious alleged violations of the securities laws and will seek to bring redress to investors harmed by violations."Q: XML to CSV output in XSLT I'm using XSLT to generate a CSV file of a value passed from a client. Q: When to use Instance or Static Variable When you instantiate a Class or just declare it, you can put a lot of text in the init method. But when you initialize the Class as Static it can only do the same. If you put a lot of text in the static Variable or Initialization Method and have Static methods and properties, will you just take up space or does any text in the statics actually execute? A: If you put a lot of text in the static Variable or Initialization Method and have Static methods and properties, will you just take up space or does any text in the statics actually execute? static variables are allocated by the implementation of the JVM. So if you were to create a class that only has static variables (ie nothing else) and instantiated just one instance of that class then that instance will use the memory space that was allocated for all of the static variables. So you would see the benefit of an over-sized static initializer block. If you were to create a class that contains several instances (ie something that you would call a class) and had several static variables then you would see the memory waste from initializing your static variables in each instance. So the static initializer block would be very useful for you, an interest in another. When that comes to pass, the creditors and the debtor agree upon a scheme whereby the debtor makes a lump sum payment into the trust and the creditors get an interest free loan. The document with the notice to creditors should be scrutinized carefully. Certain provisions may be no-nos: First, make sure that the debtor does not pay any creditors out of the payment. The doctrine of constructive fraud or a breach of fiduciary duty prevents such activity. In the case of a bankruptcy trustee, a turnover order must be secured and the trustee is only entitled to what the debtor is holding for the benefit of creditors. Second, make sure that the trust agreement is payable upon death of the debtor. The trust may be made revocable. The trustee loses authority with the debtor's death. Third, make sure that the trust provides for the naming of a trustee upon death. The drafter of the document should know that there will be a trustee for life and a successor trustee upon the debtor's death. Fourth, make sure that the debtor does not name the trustee as the beneficiary. If the debtor does not
