Not at the end of a week, but on the last day of every month. It’s a term best known to us techie types with different machines who hear each other say that phrase and nod knowingly. For most other people, however, it simply means every last Friday of every month (more accurately, it means payday, and the days leading up to payday are known as payday, while the day itself is known as payday). “Payday” has become the generic term for the paycheques we get on the first of every month. Even people who do not work in the financial sector hear of (and use) this term. The same people, if asked, would tell you that they work “weekends”, or have something that they are “paid” for, and also they eat “dinner” (or “food”), and finally, they have “beds” and “clothes”. It also contains an IPA (International Phonetic Alphabet) dictionary that looks up words in your language based on the sounds that words make. The translation and IPA will both be made by me and as far as I know, the only other package for doing this is Microsoft's. However, the sounds provided by my dictionary can be set to anything you want (including English). Like Google Translate for example, a relatively accurate version of what you type is provided so that you do not have to type a lot of the same thing over and over to get the same word. The English dictionary also has conjugations of verbs of 3 of the 6 Japanese verbs. This should help with learning them. I am still working on getting verb conjugations for more Japanese verbs. Currently, I have an English dictionary that has about 200,000 words so there's still a lot of work to do. Go to play.okksu.com (or just click the button) to find out how to get started. The CFL is one of the country's largest employers and has the closest-knit fan base. That makes it no surprise when players and coaches refer to their employer with affection, particularly when several of the country's biggest and best communities are located in Alberta. Several top prospects from U.S. colleges and Canadian universities are lined up to play in the Canadian Football League this season. Here's a look

Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to a vehicular drive train apparatus for internal combustion engine and electric motor, and more particularly to a two-motor hybrid vehicle drive train apparatus including a differential unit, adapted to drive front wheels and a rear wheels. 2. Description of the Prior Art In a conventional manner, as shown in FIG. 6, a differential unit 21 has been arranged between a electric motor 22 having a rotatable shaft 22b, and the front wheels 31 through 35 having rotatable shafts 31a and 35a. In this case, when the rotational speed of the electric motor 22 is kept constant, the rotational speed of the output shaft of the differential unit 21 is varied as the rotational speed of the front wheels 31 through 35 is varied, while the rotational speed of the electric motor 22 is varied as the rotational speed of the output shaft of the differential unit 21 is varied. In the conventional arrangement, the rotational speed of the differential unit 21 is varied as the rotational speed of the electric motor 22 is varied. Therefore, when the electric motor 22 is operated for a relatively long period of time, due to hardening of grease, etc., the rotational speed of the differential unit 21 is varied, which leads to variation in the rotational speed of the electric motor 22. In particular, when the rotational speed of the electric motor 22 is varied due to the variation in the rotational speed of the differential unit 21, the output power of the electric motor 22 is varied, which undesirably affects the drivability of the vehicle. In the light of the above, it is an
