Police are seeking an older man in connection with the robbery of a central North Carolina brewery. Wilderness Brewing Company was robbed early Saturday morning after the owner left the loading dock door open. Police say a man entered the brewery and used a handgun to demand money from the owner. The owner was not physically injured. The robber fled with cash and beer, which was later recovered. Police described the suspect as an older, white man wearing a baseball cap, a blue hoodie, a toboggan and a jacket. He was last seen running west on South Church Street and is thought to be in the neighborhood, possibly the 700 block of South Church Street. Anyone with information is asked to call Crime Stoppers at 252-575-7111.In a development that has drawn criticism, Facebook has removed more than 100 pages and groups associated with a powerful Russia-linked troll farm in attempts to clean up networks of political misinformation, the company said. The apparent move was first reported by the Daily Beast. "On November 1, we discovered that Facebook was being used to operate 'inauthentic accounts,'" Facebook said in a statement provided to NBC News. "We took these pages down not only because they were inauthentic, but also because they attempted to profit by deceiving people." Facebook added that the perpetrators "created networks of 'inauthentic' accounts and used them to
