Note that image editing software has been available for many years, even before Photoshop. However, Photoshop has become so dominant that it has become the standard name for this type of software.

Photoshop has a system called Smart Objects that allows you to define additional layers of information that can be assigned to a single object and then selectively changed, providing more control for image manipulation than a traditional layer. Photoshop also has some advantages over other image-editing programs, such as adding special-effects features to images, as discussed in the later section, "Photoshop for Designing Special Effects." Photoshop contains layers and masks (a special type of layer) that enable you to define areas of an image that are altered or masked out in a more efficient way than a traditional layer system provides. Figure 2-1 shows an example of a cartoon image in layers with no masking, and in Figure 2-2, there's a masking layer for the image in Figure 2-1. Figure 2-3 shows the same image with a new layer, the background, created and masked in the same way as the masking layer was created in Figure 2-2. Figure 2-4 shows that a new layer has been added to the image.

Photoshop uses pixel-based editing, which affects the ultimate size of the image. For example, if you create an image that is 600 pixels by 600 pixels, a pixel is  $1/600$  of an inch or  $1/300$  of a centimeter, so creating the same image at 100 pixels by 100 pixels is only  $1/100$  of an inch or  $1/100$  of a centimeter. Photoshop also contains tools to easily create custom brushes that can be applied in a selection or paint bucket tool.

Photoshop has become dominant in the industry and is the most used image-editing program. But there is a growing group of users (and even designers and photographers) who prefer other image-editing programs. These other programs include the Adobe Creative Suite: Illustrator: This part of the Creative Suite was created with professional graphic designers in mind, and it's more difficult to learn, use, and master than Photoshop. It's optimized for vector graphics and uses layers, paths, and strokes, which make it perfect for creating professional-looking illustrations.

images and even adjust flaws in an image. In this guide you will be learning to edit and enhance your images using Photoshop CS5. Know Photoshop CC's Viewing Window and Lens With Photoshop CC, the Viewing Window is where you will be accessing each of your images. In the Library panel, you will have the ability to view your original images. Additionally, through the Library you will be able to access additional files and utilities which will be covered in this tutorial. By default, Photoshop will place the file icon of your images in the Editing Window which is where your image is displayed. If you are adjusting your images using the 5 tools located to the right of the icon, the most frequently used tools will be placed on top. In the third "column" you will see which layers the image has and the last three options will be resized options. You will find a Resize button that will allow you to increase or decrease the dimensions of the image. The final button displays options that include increasing the visibility of the image. In order for you to adjust your view of the image by zooming in and out, you will first be required to use the Zoom window. Click the Window button on the top right of the screen and a small menu will pop up. From there, you will see the Zoom window.

Q: How do you take the derivative of  $x^{\sin^2(2x)}$ ? How do I take the derivative of the following with respect to  $x$ ?  $x^{\sin^2(2x)}$  I have tried replacing  $x^a$  with  $e^{a \log x}$  so that  $\log x$  becomes  $0$  I've tried to use the chain rule but it's giving me a lot of annoying  $\begin{cases} \sin^2(2x) = \sin^2(2x)\cos^2(2x) + \sin(2x)\cos^2(2x) \\ \cos^2(2x) = 1 - \sin^2(2x) \end{cases}$  A:

$$\begin{aligned} \frac{d}{dx} x^{\sin^2(2x)} \\ &= x^{\sin^2(2x)-1} \end{aligned}$$

$$\frac{d}{dx} x^{\sin^2(2x)} \quad \parallel$$

$$= x^{\sin^2(2x)-1}$$

$$\frac{d}{dx} e^{\frac{\sin^2(2x)}{x}} \quad \parallel$$

$$= x^{-1} \cdot e^{-\frac{\sin^2(2x)}{x}}$$

$$\frac{d}{dx} \cos(2x) = -\sin(2x) \cdot 2 = -2\sin(2x)$$

$$\frac{d}{dx} \sin(2x) = \cos(2x) \cdot 2 = 2\cos(2x)$$

In general,  $\frac{d}{dx} x^a = a x^{a-1}$

A: You can write  $x^{\sin^2(2x)} = e^{\frac{\sin^2(2x)}{2}}$  and then, by the product rule,

$$\frac{d}{dx} x^{\sin^2(2x)} = e^{\frac{\sin^2(2x)}{2}} \cdot \frac{d}{dx} \left( \frac{\sin^2(2x)}{2} \right)$$

What's New In?

Fine-needle aspiration cytology of infectious mononucleosis and lymphadenitis. The use of fine-needle aspiration (FNA) cytology to diagnose infectious mononucleosis (IM) and lymphadenitis is described. The FNA smear showed lobulated lymphoid cells with mild to moderate nuclear enlargement, intranuclear vacuoles, abundant nucleoli, abundant basophilic cytoplasm, and prominent cytoplasmic borders.

Lymphocytes in the blood smears were not as large as those seen in the FNA smears.

FNA is a useful technique for cytopathologic diagnosis of IM and lymphadenitis. A differential diagnosis of IM is not difficult when the FNA smears show predominantly cytologically enlarged lymphocytes with prominent cytoplasmic borders, nuclear membranes, and abundant basophilic cytoplasm.
