Influence of inflammation on the pharmacokinetics of cyclosporine and tacrolimus in the rat. Due to the crucial part played by the renal mechanism of elimination for the toxicity of the calcineurin inhibitors cyclosporine (CsA) and tacrolimus (FK506), many attempts have been made to develop methods for modulating their toxicity. To our knowledge, this is the first study to consider the effects of inflammation on the pharmacokinetics of CsA and FK506. A single IV injection of interleukin-2 (IL-2) ( $1.8 \times 10^5$ ) U/kg body wt) into male Wistar rats induced a marked, approximately 4-fold increase in the clearance of CsA (16.6 mL/min/kg) and FK506 (25.7 mL/min/kg) in the early phase of treatment (0 to 6 h). Although this was associated with an increased renal clearance for both drugs (approximately 4-fold), the differences in the volume of distribution for CsA (2.26 vs. 1.45 L/kg) and FK506 (2.01 vs. 1.57 L/kg) remained small, indicating that both compounds were distributed to other organs with IL-2 treatment. At late time points (24 and 48 h), the plasma clearance and distribution volume both returned to near-control levels. Because these changes were not related to an IL-2-induced increase in the function of any organ system, we conclude that the increased clearance resulted from a transient change in systemic elimination. The increase in CsA clearance was associated with higher blood levels of the parent compound, leading to greater total blood levels of CsA, whereas the increase in FK506 clearance was associated with lower blood levels of the compound, resulting in a lower level of the parent compound. The data indicate that inflammation can dramatically alter the pharmacokinetics of CsA and FK506 in the rat, but the magnitude of the changes and the clinical consequences remain

Create your Ultimate Team and take on the challenge of becoming a FIFA Master by collecting and managing your favorite teams like Barcelona, Bayern Munich, Real Madrid, AS Roma, Arsenal, Manchester United, AC Milan, Inter Milan, United States, England, and Mexico. The great thing about FUT is that you can create unique individuals on your team and play them in order to win FIFA points, making your team more powerful and having a chance of winning the FIFA World Cup. Build your Ultimate Team with cards that are sold in packs, have new ones earned with gameplay, have new ones earned as you climb the leagues, or unlock them as you complete personal challenges. Keep in mind that all of these cards will be unlocked at random as you play the game, so for example you'll find yourself with a card from a player who doesn't even exist yet and another from Lionel Messi, despite never having played with him. MyClub - FIFA 22 introduces a new way to experience the game, the MyClub mode. For players who have a passion for soccer, the MyClub mode allows you to take full control of your career as you manage the gameplay and look of your dream team in a single player campaign. The game will allow you to customize your own teammates, kits, and stadium, manage player contracts, and even create your own in-game career.

Q: Is it possible to restrict the allowed values for a typed collection? I was wondering if it was possible to restrict the values a typed collection can have? Here is a basic example. What I want to do is have a collection which only accepts integer values. I was thinking of using an enum, and restricting the values to that.

public class RestrictedCollection { public List Values { get; set; } } public enum ValuesToRestrict { NumbersOnly, LettersOnly } public class Test { public RestrictedCollection Items { get; set; } }

Is it possible to define a class which restricts the types of values for a collection? I feel like this might be something like an enum, but I am not sure.

A: Define your Enum like this: `public enum RestrictType { NumbersOnly, LettersOnly, All }` Then, your class should use the Restrict
