Today, they come in all shapes and sizes, and you've probably got at least a few of them lying around your home. What you may not have any idea about is that there are a few things you can do with USB drives besides store your pictures or important documents. If you've ever tried something like this before, you've probably seen the white disc icon. This is a little white arrow sitting in the center of the storage area. As you might have guessed, this is an indicator of what kind of content is inside of the flash drive. Before you start looking at the contents of the drive, you should first determine what kind of content it is. If you're curious, here is what you should look for: Data This is likely to be the content which will keep your personal info safe and sound. It can be pictures, audio files, music, movies, and any other files you might need. If it's content with a special use, you can find out more about it here.
