How to use css class name as code attribute in html5?
How to use CSS class name as code attribute in HTML5?
Example A: If you use HTML 5 (as you have tagged), then you should be using the required attribute to indicate which elements are required. In your example, the required attribute would be either myInput or another identifier, based on what else you are using. Example: In your case, though, I think you need to be using JavaScript, and this solution should work: `var myInput = document.getElementById("myInput");` You could then access it with `myInput.classList.add("foo");` to add a class to the element. More information can be found here. If you're comfortable with JavaScript, you could use the placeholder attribute:
