Q: How can I change the class of an element in HTML using AngularJS? I have a div element that I want to toggle between a hidden element and a display element. I am trying to toggle the display between false and true to achieve this. I currently have: The HTML: Resize Show The hideOrShow = true and hideOrShow = false toggle between these states, which sets whether the div is visible or not. I have also tried this: hideOrShow = false and hideOrShow = true toggle between these states, which sets whether the div is hidden or not. Both of these are to hide or show the div, but do not toggle between both states. How can I fix this? A: To toggle between open and closed, use ng-show and ng-hide. ng-show and ng-hide take an expression, so you need to put your logic in there. (the expression changes if you change hideOrShow in your model) You also need to remember ng-show and ng-hide get evaluated asynchronously (see the AngularJS Documentation for more information on the difference between synchronous and asynchronous execution). In your case, you want to have the div's visibility change at the same time as what's in scope: Here's a jsFiddle Alternatively, if you want to just toggle an element between open and closed with no logic, you can also use ng-class.
