As can be seen from the video, the 737-900 series is very similar to the 737-900ER series, except that the engines are different. The 737-900 series features the same large "Mach ring" in the nose. The engines are different also in the 737-900 series, with a CFM International LEAP-1A on the nose, whereas the LEAP-1B is used on the -900ER. Honeybee (Apis mellifera) venom: a potent antibacterial agent against Gram-positive and Gram-negative microorganisms. Twenty-one samples of honeybee (Apis mellifera) venom were screened for their antimicrobial activity against important Gram-positive (Staphylococcus aureus, Streptococcus faecalis, Streptococcus pyogenes, Bacillus subtilis, Mycobacterium bovis, Micrococcus luteus and Listeria monocytogenes) and Gram-negative (Enterobacter cloacae, Escherichia coli, Klebsiella pneumoniae, Salmonella typhimurium and Pseudomonas aeruginosa) bacteria. The results showed that samples from different geographical areas have distinct antibacterial activity. A synergistic effect was observed in all bacterial strains when honeybee venom was used in combination with penicillin or ampicillin. The minimum inhibitory concentration and minimal bactericidal concentration varied for different samples. Our data suggested that honeybee venom could be a potential natural antibacterial agent due to its well-established safety in clinical practice.
