Photoshop's popularity among photographers is attested to by the sheer number of people who've used it for special effects, retouching photos, and other image-based operations. Refractory mucositis in two pediatric solid-organ transplant patients with acute myelogenous leukemia. Graft-versus-host disease (GVHD) is a common complication in patients with acute myelogenous leukemia (AML) receiving allogeneic stem cell transplantation and is associated with mucosal damage. The frequency of mucositis, defined as severe oral and/or nasal mucosal inflammation with ulceration, ranges from 20% to 100% in this patient population. We describe 2 patients with refractory mucositis following allogeneic stem cell transplantation for AML. Both patients received immunosuppressive regimens as conditioning therapy, one in anticipation of chemotherapy for AML and the other in preparation for marrow ablative therapy. Both patients received additional treatment, including mycophenolate mofetil and etanercept, as well as systemic corticosteroids, and neither patient responded to these treatments, demonstrating the need for clinical trials of novel therapies.

Q: How can I convert a string to an instance of a struct in C? I'm not entirely familiar with C, so I apologize if this isn't the correct route to take in order to solve this issue... I have a struct in C containing a string, typedef struct { char* address; } Address; And I have a function that takes a string as a parameter, like so: void do_something(const char* s) { Address dest; dest.address = s; //OR dest.address = (s); } In the case where s is a string literal, I get that this doesn't work because it's being executed at compile time. So how can I convert a string to an Address instance and then pass it to a function that expects a Address instance and return the address as a string? A: You cannot convert a string to a struct. The correct way to do what you are trying to do is to pass a pointer to the string like so: void do_something(const char s) { // Now that s is a pointer, we can convert it to an address // in order to pass it into the struct, and get a pointer to // the struct back. Address dest;
