Although Photoshop is a powerful tool for professional and amateur photographers alike, keep in mind that it does have a learning curve and is not always easy to use. Photoshop can often present a steep learning curve because of the many features and options that can be used to perform many tasks. Using the Import and Preflight Commands Like any tool, Photoshop may seem intimidating at first because you're not sure where to start. Unlike other tools, you don't first have to create a document and insert a canvas on which to place your photo. You can let Photoshop do all the heavy lifting for you and start with an empty canvas by using the Import command in the File menu (Ctrl+I on the Mac). You can use the Import command to import the file you created with another tool (such as a scanner or digital camera), or you can import a photo into Photoshop from the clipboard, which contains a copy of the image that you copied to the clipboard. You can also import a Photoshop file from your hard drive, although this can be slow. You can edit the image using Photoshop's powerful tools. After you open the image, however, you'll usually have to use the Adobe Preview or Photoshop Adjustments dialog boxes to make any adjustments before it looks good. The Import command is your first tool for adjusting the photo to look more professional. To import an image, choose File?Import, select the file type you want to import, and click Open. Then use the tools in the following sections to edit the photo. The next few sections describe how to import and prepare the image using the Import command. To use the other tools in this chapter, see Chapter 14, which covers the tools of the Adjustments panel. Importing an image Photoshop, like most image editing programs, has a file type dialog box for importing images and other images. You may be using a scanner or a digital camera, which creates a bitmap file as a result of scanning or shooting the image. (For more about file formats, see Chapter 13.) You can import files with two file types into Photoshop: JPEG or TIFF file: A JPEG (Joint Photographic Experts Group) or TIFF (Tagged Image File Format) file is an Adobe standard format for compressing and storing a digital photograph or image. Photoshop file: A Photoshop file is a Photoshop extension that enables you to save your work in a format that's compatible with the Adobe Photoshop file extension

The Ink Stamp adds a digital ink effect to an image by cloning the area being stampled. The Gradient tool lets you move or change the color of the pixels to form a gradient, which is useful for adding color to an image. The Magic Wand tool lets you select groups of pixels on an image by clicking in the box to select a radius (a circle in which to select pixels) or clicking with the right mouse button. The Magic Wand tool can also be used to select specific colors and return the colors around the clicked area. It is similar to the Select by color tool in many other paint and image editing software, such as CorelDraw, Paint Shop Pro, and Corel Photo-Paint. The Eraser tool removes pixels that are selected on an image. The Eraser tool works much like the Magic Wand tool, except that you can use it to remove pixels instead of select them. It lets you remove pixels from large areas. The Clone Stamp tool copies selected pixels from one area of the image to another area of the image. It is similar to the Magic Wand tool, except that you can use it to remove pixels instead of select them. It is very useful for eliminating unwanted marks on the image or removing a defect such as a blemish or a large mark. The Move tool lets you move objects or pixels to a new location in an image. It works like the Magic Wand tool, except that you can move objects instead of just pixels. The move tool is useful when, for example, you want to reposition an object or a image on the canvas. The Dodge tool lightens an area of an image using some sort of blur filter. It's similar to the Color Replacement filter, except that it uses the Dodge tool to apply the color. The Burn tool darkens an area of an image using some sort of blur filter. It's similar to the Color Replacement tool, except that it uses the Burn tool to apply the color. Pen tools are used to add various types of textures, raster graphics, and text effects to an image. They are very similar to the Layer Styles features in other graphics programs. There are many more tools that are specific to a given object, such as adding a drop shadow to a text box. Photoshop's tools are powerful because they are able to perform a vast variety of actions. Veloflex Avalanche shovel The Veloflex Avalanche shovel is an alpine climbing, rescue and work tool. It is used by search and rescue teams as a back-up to a variety of other tools, and for snow cave rescue. It is a tool designed to make it easier for people to climb into the alpine. The Veloflex Avalanche shovel was introduced in 1972 by Silver Wolf of Veloflex International. The Veloflex Avalanche shovel has a longer handle than other spade types, a wider and more powerful blade, and is attached to a telescopic handle. According to Veloflex, the shovel is available in five sizes for use by adults and children. If you want to keep up on developments in this field, check out the Minnesota S3 Blog, the Minnesota State Legislature's blog or the Minnesota Department of Education's S3 Blog. Minnesota's schools are facing a budget crisis. The Department of Education this week said it will cut nearly $57 million from its budget, $15 million more than expected, until it gets a two-year spending package from the legislature. The cuts, if approved, could impact eight school districts, including the high-profile Grand Forks Public Schools in North Dakota. The Davenport-Cambridge Community School District, which has a strong science focus, received word this week from its board that its budget, which is about $2.3 million, was headed to the chopping block. The district has, however, been authorized to raise taxes by the state to cover the costs. "We've had a good year," district superintendent Tom Berg said. "We're optimistic about getting through the year, but we're optimistic about what the legislature is going to do." The following comes from a meeting last night, when the school board heard, among other items, a report about cutting six science, technology, engineering and math positions. "You will be losing some of the folks that are the key of our student success,"
