'Jurassic World' Prequel Might Be Panned But 'Garbage' Actor Loses Appeal from the fast-forward dept So, after A&E and the dinosaurs part company (well, we're talking about the big screen here, not the lawyers, which is technically another thing), the "Jurassic Park" prequel might be going ahead. According to Screen Rant, the judge refused to overturn a decision made by the appellate court earlier this year. Entertainment Weekly asked the District Court, located in the federal city of California, to review a decision made by the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. The appellate court ruling overturned the lower court's decision that said the studio had no rights to use the name "Jurassic Park," the report said. The District Court has apparently opted to let the original ruling stand, meaning the decision by the lower court is under appeal. This is the case that typically happens in front of the Supreme Court of the United States. The appeal, filed by filmmaker Nicholas Meyer, alleged the studio violated copyright law by using the name "Jurassic Park" for a movie that was unrelated to the "Called of the Jungle" prequel. Meyer argued, as he had in lower courts, that "Jurassic Park" was a registered trademark and that rights attached to it. And, as we pointed out a few weeks ago, he was probably right. Even if a trademark isn't a registered trademark, a trademark is still a trademark. But, what these lawsuits are usually about is the more expansive notion of "use in commerce." That is, while a trademark owner might never sell a product bearing its mark, that doesn't mean it can't use its mark in connection with products sold in commerce. The issue with the "Jurassic World" prequel seems to be that he can't claim that he sold a product with the name "Jurassic Park" or "Jurassic World" on it. That's certainly how it would have to be defined. And, if that's the case, "Jurassic World" isn't just infringing a trademark, it's worse than that. It's violating the copyright of a trademark. While a trademark holder is entitled to control use of its marks, a trademark holder is not permitted to violate the copyright of another. At least, not in the broad sense. In other words, if you publish a book that contains a character or characters

Implementation of an effective computerized tool for monitoring and quality assurance in external pneumatic ventilation. An effective strategy to monitor and improve quality of respiratory care requires an efficient computerized tool. In spite of the benefits of computer monitoring, much has not been done in respiratory therapy to utilize such technology. This study was conducted to assess the feasibility and effectiveness of a computerized tool in the clinical setting. Thirty patients in the intensive care unit were monitored while on the external pneumatic ventilation (EPV). The following parameters were continuously recorded on a standard computer: heart rate, oximetry, peak inspiratory pressure (PIP) and inspiratory pressure support (IPS) requirements, pulmonary mechanics (respiratory rate, tidal volume, minute volume, fraction of inspired oxygen and exhaled tidal volume), blood gases, ventilator efficiency and other ventilator parameters. Exhaled tidal volumes were recorded as a percentage of the MV. Additionally, the quality of patient care was assessed with direct observation of the respiratory therapist every 30 min throughout the monitoring period. All data was transferred to a standard commercial program. Although in a nonrandomized design, the quality of care ratings were similar ($P>0.05$) between the computer and noncomputer groups. Peak inspiratory pressure as a percentage of the set pressure was significantly ($P,$ " by Chapman & Hall, 2nd ed., 1949, p. 63. 9 We refrain from selecting the number twelve as this is a more difficult task.
