The technology was developed to more closely represent real-life football, simulating movements like juggling, stepping and turning, as well as player collisions. "In the last few years of digital innovation in the sports industry, we've seen an explosion of data, specifically around the area of athlete/player data," said Matt Bilbey, Senior Producer of FIFA. "The FIFA Team have been working with our data scientists and developers to develop and deliver cutting-edge AI - from data-driven goal-line technology to goal-line algorithms, and from player-behaviour modelling to virtual teammate behaviour - to add incredible value and authenticity to the FIFA experience." The data from the FIFA World Cup™ Tournament in Russia enabled the development of advanced player-model and AI technology that better replicates the actions and movement of players on the pitch. This also generated a depth of data around how FIFA players behave on the pitch, including the way they move, the type of movement, their positioning, how they anticipate attacking opportunities, and decisions they make. To enable the inclusion of all these pieces of data, EA Sports produced a motion capture suit for each of the 23 best FIFA players that contains inertial sensors, cameras and a range of data collection devices. This suit was used to capture data for each player. FIFA creates a series of cognitive algorithms that exist separately, including the Personal Ratings Index, Cognitive Awareness, Recognition and Processing, and Awareness. Each of these exists in a world where they are fed data from a player, including physical, cognitive and strategic attributes, and given a series of tasks that match real-life game situations. The algorithms work to create a player-model and player-behaviour that should make them feel more like a real person. These data are then used to create in-game, player-to-player interactions with Artificial Intelligence (AI) and machine learning. This enables AI to react according to a player's cognition, as well as to be dynamic around the pitch, reacting to a player's system, reactions and movement. FIFA has also experimented with using the accelerometers found in modern-day smartphones to improve goal-line technology. The accelerometer is used to detect the spin of a ball and how it is spinning, allowing game officials to make the correct decision on the goal or not. Game mechanics, changes in player attributes and more are included through the

FIFA is the biggest, most popular and authentic football video game experience around. Countless fans can enjoy FIFA's celebrated gameplay and deeply authentic presentation every day, from the pitch to the pub, and everywhere in between. How does FIFA work? Every interaction you make with FIFA in the game world is calculated, scored, registered and used to build a real-life football club. Whether you're shooting from an authentic shot meter or hammering in a shot with the authentic goalkeeper's authentic feet, FIFA's advanced physics and match engine mean that every action translates to the pitch. Then it's down to the intelligence on the pitch, where the game's physics engine determines which actions are performed and which are blocked, tackled and intercepted by teammates. The game's decision-making artificial intelligence uses every decision you make to build your team's tactics, tactics and players. Every player you create, from average Joes to diva superstars, will develop and perform with natural human characteristics like speed and fitness, and then perform on the pitch with every move based on the abilities, strengths and weaknesses of each player. This means you'll find that your players perform and react like authentic footballers, every time. What's new in FIFA 22? FIFA 22 introduces new gameplay features that bring the game even closer to the real thing with key innovations across every mode. The ball is the central focus and all of the game's play is based around getting into a position to score, creating and taking on players. Advances in shooting, handling, ball control and acceleration give players a chance to shine by taking a player's one-on-one chances and making it count, opening up gameplay around the world and ensuring every shot is a shot worth taking. A new ball physics system brings a complete overhaul to the way players pass, dribble and control the ball, with more tactics, anticipation and strategy in every phase of the game. New Referee System - Elite Referee Introducing the Elite Referee System in FIFA 22 introduces a completely new level of refereeing, with intelligent and dynamic refereeing calls for every incident on the pitch, along with matchday referee decisions, with dissenters now deemed more worthy of reprimand. bc9d6d6daa
