Flow cytometric analysis of murine bone marrow cells. Flow cytometry is a technique of analysis that has become extremely important in the study of the immune system. Originally, flow cytometry was employed to study lymphocytes and their surface markers, and has become a core technology of modern lymphocyte immunology. Now, the ability to analyze many other types of cells in a rapid and reliable manner is becoming a part of everyday life in many laboratories. Here we describe two simple and straightforward protocols for immunophenotyping of the bone marrow cells using flow cytometry. The evolution of reagents for assessing cardiac dysfunction. Cardiomyopathies are increasingly recognized as a major cause of death in the industrialized world and the understanding of their pathophysiology is only beginning to emerge. The whole spectrum of cardiomyopathies include conditions that produce asynergies that manifest primarily as tissue dysfunction or conditions in which there are no known causes of tissue dysfunction. Clinical presentation can be highly variable and the genetic linkage of specific conditions remains elusive. The limitation of currently available diagnostic methods in diagnosis of dilated cardiomyopathies has stimulated an explosion of activity in the search for new and effective therapies. Different diagnostic modalities are currently available in animal models of cardiomyopathies and these are reviewed in this essay. The role of biochemical markers in the diagnosis and management of patients with heart failure is also discussed. George Kennan's memoir of the Cold War, "The Consequences of the Left, published in 1982, had few sales in Russia. During the 1985-91 era of glasnost, though, the book was reprinted and sold well. President Boris Yeltsin was not alone in vouching for Kennan's work. Sergei Shakhrai, a historian who went to Washington to work

Objective 2: To develop an in-country surveillance system for childhood tuberculosis, in collaboration with the Office of the WHO Country Representative in the United States and the CDC. This system will incorporate the BTS's capacity to distinguish children with tuberculosis from other febrile illnesses among children seeking care in primary care settings through the Integrated Management of Childhood Illness (IMCI) strategy. Objectives: Working with the WHO Country Representative in USA, WHO and CDC have made a commitment to the government of South Africa to provide technical assistance to build a surveillance system in South Africa, and have made a commitment to support three full years of surveillance after the start of operations. Main Points: The South African government is appreciative of the efforts by the GAVI Alliance to identify key countries and develop strategies to combat childhood malaria and pneumonia, but is concerned that no funding has been provided for surveillance in the country. The South African government has demonstrated an interest in developing a new surveillance system for childhood tuberculosis, but is also concerned about the cost to the health care system and the burden on health workers. The government is committed to building a surveillance system in South Africa, and welcomes a partnership with the GAVI Alliance.
