I know I can just replace all the occurrences of the string but I am looking for a more clever solution. A:

Is this a problem or a desired effect? You really need to clarify what you are trying to achieve. Anyway, you can just replace the occurrences of the string by one non-greedy match: `import re pattern = re.compile(r'\bonline\.h\s+(\d+)\s+\b\s*(1)\s*\b', re.DOTALL | re.IGNORECASE)` with `open("test.txt", 'r')` as `text_file`: `for line in text_file: if pattern.match(line): line = re.sub(pattern, '\1', line) print(line)` Or, if you want the version to run on a different line per occurrence of the string, I would do it by regex groups. `import re pattern = re.compile(r'\bonline\.h\s+(\d+)\s+\b\s*(1)\s*\b', re.DOTALL | re.IGNORECASE)` with `open("test.txt", 'r')` as `text_file`: `for match in pattern.finditer(line): print(match.group(1))` Doing this you can be sure that no more than one match is replaced per line. KUALA LUMPUR (Reuters) - Malaysian police say they have detained 27 people from several nations linked to the MRT-3 rail project in an operation that netted false documents and fraudulent qualifications from China, South Korea and the United States. The National Security Council (NSC) coordinated the bust, which began last Thursday night and ended Sunday morning, the Special Branch's Unlawful Activities Division chief, Datuk Abdul Hamid Abdul Latif, told a news conference. As of mid-morning on Monday, five of the men were still detained under the charge of producing false documents. Two persons from China and one from the United States were detained for being in possession of falsified Malaysian Qualifications Certificate (MQC) and a degree from the United States. Two other Americans were arrested for possessing fraudulent degrees and qualifications. One of the Chinese was also in possession of a forged diplomatic passport and was charged with possession
