Note In 2007, Adobe released Photoshop Elements, a version of Photoshop that was designed for people with less graphic-design experience. You can find out more about the program at "www.adobe.com" and its book, _Essential Photoshop Elements 10_ by Joe Rock. # Using Image Viewing Tools Images on the Web often have weird headers that make them unreadable. To get around this problem, you can use a few different utilities to view images online. ## Preview The Web browser that comes with your Mac or PC offers three different ways to view images: * Image Viewer#. Apple's _Preview_ is the default image viewer, and it makes it easy to view and organize your photos. If you have the Open dialog box and want to view image files, you can use the Open command. * Web Browser#. If you are viewing an image in a Web page, you can see it in either the browser window that you are using or in a pop-up dialog box on the browser's toolbar.

The most common use of Photoshop is in image editing and image manipulation. And what makes the difference is the incredible range of options available. Every Photoshop user has a favorite tools or even a 'toolbox' that includes and many of the tools are either 'must have' or 'often needed'. And even if you just use a few of the tools, the Photoshop tools are integral to the interface, whereas an alternative could look different. Here is a list of the top 50 most used Photoshop tools that we all use from time to time. You can download a copy and start using them yourself. #1. Eraser There's no image editing tool that's used more than the Eraser tool. It really cuts down on the number of steps you have to spend in order to get rid of the excess and save the image. The entire Photoshop Elements, Lightroom and Adobe Cloud pipeline for photo editing is now built on the GPU, so it's easy for it to run on a faster PC or Mac than Photoshop CS4 #2. Layers You can create a new layer on the fly for most operations and then make changes to that layer or work on the layer independently. The first layer of the image is always that created at the time of opening the document, so there are no hidden layers that you can't see. #3. Gradient Tool We often use a gradient tool to blend colors together and to achieve effects such as shadows and gradients. This tool offers an easy way to create a gradient on your work. #4. Gradient Filter The Gradient Filter is one of the most powerful tools in Photoshop Elements. One of the best features is that you can use it to adjust the gradient itself. #5. Gradient Window Gradients are a powerful tool in the elements. The Gradient window is where you can create, adjust and edit gradients for many effects. #6. Panorama Tool An easy way to create a composition from multiple images that would normally require stitching and manual merging. #7. Paths The path tool does everything you would usually use the smart brush to do, but it's faster, more precise and easier to use. You can use the path tool to create a pattern for a stamp, a 05a79cecff

Consort Song The Consort Song () was a hymn formerly sung by the Obedient (later "Recusant", meaning "remaining faithful to the heresy of the popes";) Poor Clares in the monastery of El Escorial, Spain. It was composed in the Gothic language and was written by the friar Nicholas of Vicenza, who died in 1382. It was sung at the night office, the last office of the canonical day. Originally a simple hymn, it became complicated during the renaissance by additions and transformations by various poets. The hymn, a good illustration of the style, order and contents of the monastic offices, was called. It dealt with what was called the "controversy of the Lady", the inability of the saints to change their vows without approval of the pope, as to the matter of the withdrawal of women from the world. The resulting hymn was in four movements, beginning with a general prayer, followed by a temptation, then a proclamation of the victory of the saints over the devil, and ending with a prayer of thanksgiving. The occasional ramblings of a pilgrim through time, space, and life. Wednesday, January 24, 2016 A Different Perspective This week on the radio was a discussion about discussions between police and civilians when they are stopped by police. The conversation centered around how police should deal with frustrated citizens. I believe there were a few important things that was left out of this discussion. First, imagine if you were a police officer, what if you found out that you were approaching a member of the community with a known history of violent crime against you or yours. What if, upon approaching this individual, he pulled his weapon and fired upon you. What if the person you were attempting to apprehend had a history of escape and a violent crime record. Would you respond in a different way? Would you be slower to respond, understanding that you may not be given the ability to respond if he is not a danger to you or the people who are around you? I would like to offer you an example. I was part of a family that had a birthday party. My children were in the backyard playing and a neighbor, who was also in the area, was looking after his children. We approached the neighbor and asked to get the children out of harms way. To get them out of harms way, my children were walking out of the backyard, so that no one was in harm's way. Now as we walked up to the neighbor and asked to get the children out of harms way, he pulled out a gun and pointed it at me. Now how would you handle this situation? Now back to the discussion about police and their conduct in dealing with citizens. Police officers are trained to deal with people that are exhibiting signs of violence, threats, or other items that could be a threat to themselves and/or the community. So if you believe that these people are in a different category than the population in general, that is fine, but doesn't that make you a member of the community, and society in general as well? If you believe that those who commit crimes against you or your family should be put in a different category than the rest of the population, then you are part of the community, and society as well. If you don't believe that these people are in a different category than the rest of the population, if you believe that they are just another citizen, then you are joining the mob mentality. If you believe that they are different than the rest of
