Uganda tightens stance on homosexuality Follow RT on Uganda has introduced a new bill that would criminalise people who engage in gay sex, saying that homosexuality is a 'sexual sickness' and therefore no longer a choice. Gay sex is already illegal in the East African nation, but the new law would make people who engage in gay sex liable to a hefty prison sentence. Speaking before the National Assembly, the speaker of Uganda's parliament reminded the politicians that women and children should not be harassed by homosexuals, adding that homosexual behavior is a sexual sickness. "This disease is similar to Aids," he said. It has long been claimed by some Ugandan politicians that homosexuality is a sickness that can be cured through treatment.
