The mask is the wildest Of the three stooges with plenty of slapstick, The mask is where the Three stooges meet Frank the rabid dog. While battling the circus leader, Jack is trapped in a bear trap that can only be opened by wrestling a live bear! The film was extremely well received upon initial release in 1994, and won the Academy Award for Best Original Screenplay. It currently has a 94% "fresh" rating on Rotten Tomatoes from 36 critics. Despite its low box office gross, it holds the record for the highest amount of money earned by a children's film in the United States (approximately $116 million) and Australia (approximately $85.7 million). The North American DVD sales of more than 5 million units placed it as the best selling children's DVD of all time in that region, and the movie poster was inducted into the National Toy Hall of Fame in 2007. In December 2009, "The Mask" ranked #57 on Premiere magazine's list of the 100 greatest films of the last 25 years. In October 2010, it was named one of the "100 Greatest Comedies of All Time" in a poll conducted by Empire magazine. In August 2011, the IGN editors named the 1994 version of the film #13 on their list of the "Top 25 Halloween Movies". It was also listed in the "100 Greatest Teen Movies Ever" by Space.com in 2009. In 2015, the site ranked the film #2 on their list of top "Best CGI Halloween Mask Movies". In 2016, Rotten Tomatoes ranked The Mask as the most memorable 'cast member' of the Halloween franchise, naming the cameo role of "Jack" by Brad Pitt to be #1. Popular culture, through music, film, television, and literature, helped shape the culture of the Western World. By the mid-19th century, the modern Western world had been established with the emergence of a middle class, a belief that men and women could earn respect based on their effort, and the secularization of society. During the late 19th and early 20th centuries, when the socialization of children happened in public, it contributed to the rise of the working class, particularly in Europe and North America, but also in Japan, China, and India. The August effect effect is a term used to describe the "surge in the price of oil that occurs in the weeks preceding the fall U.S. Labor Department report." The term was first identified by Henry Carter, a research economist at the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas, in a speech at the American Bankers Association's 1998 Economic Outlook Conference. Carter stated that the price of Brent crude rose approximately

$6 per barrel in the few weeks preceding the release of the Labor Department's official oil inventory report. The price of oil would decline $8 on average as a result of the falling inventory. The increase in the price of crude oil and natural gas coincided with rising employment and wages in the United States. The seasonal increase in oil consumption during the warm seasons, called the "August effect", results in a significant change in the composition of U.S. state, regional, and national levels of energy consumption. In the economic literature, the August effect is referred to as a "reflex response" with a weekly peak in energy consumption. This is because the price of energy is not determined by underlying supply and demand, but rather by cyclical seasonal changes in the demand side. The August effect is also widely attributed to the "confidence effect." The August effect (or "confidence effect") is an increase in the demand for energy beginning in the third or fourth week of August, possibly related to increased comfort levels in the month before the Labor Department releases its weekly petroleum inventory. Like the "August effect," the "confidence effect" is attributed to a change in purchasing behavior of consumers in the final two to three weeks of each month. The effect is noted at the national and regional level, as well as the state level. The August effect is also seen in other countries. In Japan and Russia it is called "hot weather thinking
