Photoshop is a particularly challenging program to master for a number of reasons. For one, it has many more settings than can be represented in a simple print or Web page. There are tens of thousands of possible settings in a Photoshop image, which is why it may take months to understand and master them all. It's one of the larger programs in the market, so there are a number of things that need to be mastered to make the most of it. In this section, we give you a primer to help you master Photoshop. We also walk through a number of different image-editing scenarios to help you understand how Photoshop works and how you can use it. Mastering The Basics Perhaps the most important thing about Photoshop is that you need to understand the basics. If you can do the following, you're a step ahead of almost everyone. Applying some basic editing commands You don't have to be an expert to master even a small subset of Photoshop's features. Two key applications are Exposure (changing the brightness and contrast of an image) and Levels (brightening and darkening an image). You can use these commands in almost any area of an image. Exposure can be used to compensate for images that are too light or too dark, Levels to correct brightness problems (which are fairly common among images from digital cameras), Curves to bring out details in shadows, and so on. You can also use the Reverse feature to make an image look the other way. For example, if your photo was taken with a camera on a sunny day and then you reverse the image, it will give the appearance of being taken on a cloudy day. This is a handy way to get around distracting shadows on your subject. These basic features should be used constantly in your workflow to produce your best-looking images. No matter what kind of images you work with, if you're using a digital camera, your photos will usually have some amount of brightness or contrast problems. Mastering the basic commands is an important part of mastering Photoshop. The most effective way to learn to use Photoshop is to take advantage of the tutorials that are available for free online. The Free tutorials on the Adobe website — www.adobe.com/products/photoshop/courses.html — are a great way to get started. (Pick the option for Basic Photoshop, not the other topics.) The Photoshop User forums also often contain a wealth of information about Photoshop and techniques you can try. Visit

The Gradient tool allows you to adjust colors in an image by applying different colors. There are many more tools in Photoshop, which are helpful for editing images. Canvas has been a standard way to add images or other content to any web page for a while. It is a way to add a simple background while maintaining the foreground content in the page. The browser actually does most of the work to add the image to the page as it fills in the block with a color that matches the background color of the page. In our example, we will use a web server hosted on our computer to show off one of the most powerful features in Canvas: the link. Using a link, we can add images and/or other HTML elements to our page in one click. Adding a link to a Canvas First, add a new Canvas. In Canvas, click on the red plus sign (+) in the top right corner and then click on the "Image" link under the "Display" menu. A window will pop up where you can click on the "Image" button to choose the image you wish to use for your Canvas. Now, you have a blank canvas in which you will be adding the hyperlink to. To add a hyperlink, click on the "Link" button. The Link dialog will pop up. You can choose from various link types. For our example, click on the "HTML" button to bring up the HTML dialog. Pick the HTML code you wish to use as a hyperlink, the URL of the web page you wish to link to, and save it in the "HTML" box. You will now have a link with no images or other content. You may need to hit "OK" to close the dialog. The link will now be added to your Canvas. Generating a link to a page We will use our own web server to generate a link to a page. Our HTML file will be in our web server's main directory, so we will open up a file called link.html. In the "HTML" dialog you can enter any HTML code. The URL to the page you wish to link to is the "href" attribute. In this case, " In the "
