To start editing photos, you need to open a Photoshop document. The file-based naming convention might look like this one: Lumber.jpg. If you don't see the file in your Open dialog box, click the arrow on the down-right side of the dialog box to expand the open folder (refer to Figure 7-2). From the folder list, select the Photomerge folder in the Graphics folder. The.psd file opens in Photoshop. 3. **Click Open.** The image opens in the Background and Canvas area. The image appears dimmed when it's open in your default workspace. 4. **Use the tools on the left side of the screen to crop and zoom in on areas of the image.** The tool options include the usual crop and crop and rotate tools, plus a few others. To zoom, use the Zoom and Hand tools. 5. **Use the tools on the right side of the screen to select the different parts of the image you want.** You can use the Selection Brush to select the image regions you want to edit. The Brush options include Pressure-Pressed (the most used tool), Soft Light, and Hard Light. Use the Selection Brush when you want to select an area but don't want to deselect that area when you release the brush. When you drag the Selection Brush onto an image area, you select that area. You can then use the Selection Brush tools to paint over the selected area. You can then paint over other areas of the image or paint areas outside the selected area. You can use Selection Brush with either press-and-hold or click-and-hold. 6. **Use the tools that appear when you press Shift+Y or Select.** Use the Paths and Layers options to access these tools. Your image layers and adjustments appear on the right side of the screen, as shown in Figure 7-3. Remembering the Old Age Pension: The Impact of an Early Death on the Pension System Abstract One hundred and five years ago, on September 3, 1884, the Dominion Government and the four Provincial Governments of Ontario, Quebec, British Columbia, and Manitoba passed the Act To Amend The Old Age Pension Act. The act began to phase out private pensions and replace them with a public pension. It was the first Act in Canada intended to protect the rights of older Canadians. It meant that by 1889, over one million men and women would receive pensionable earnings and upon reaching the age of 65, or whatever age was decided upon, would have their retirement pay and earnings guaranteed, regardless of the condition of the job market. This Act was also the first step in what Canadians would come to call Old Age Pensions. The first paid pension dates back to 1884, which began payments to those who were 65 and up. In 1914, Canada's pension program began to become more of a reality and there was a formal program to provide pensions for those 65 and over. By the end of the Great Depression, more than three-quarters of a million Canadians were receiving a pension (Lau 2005: 62). An important feature of the Old Age Pension Act was the ability of those 65 years and older to work. It required the Government, the provinces and the employers to agree on the number of jobs. That would be the number of jobs a person would be able to take a risk taking. That would be the number of jobs they could take and the wage they could receive was set. If they received a job, then that wage was set. If not, then they still got the government pension, but it was smaller. By the late 1920s, there were concerns as to whether this was too risky. Should people really be on the edge of poverty, not eating well because they had a job, and having to risk their safety on the job. It was decided that people would need a living wage from their job. The government would then help them by giving them more to live on because they were without the means to buy other foods. One hundred years later, the program continues and the question that Canadians are asking is whether it is too risky to start the Old Age Pension. Due to the changing times and the changing economy, there are significant concerns about what would happen if the Old Age Pension system, once again, was phased out. However, the state also continues to need the services of those people

The organisers of the annual event are hoping to break the world record for biggest bar of chocolate baked inside a marshmallow. This year's competition is for a "California Bar", a huge pot of brownies, ice cream and chocolate sauce. The winner will be crowned on Saturday at Montego Bay's Intercontinental Hotel. Last year's title was taken by a 4,335-gram bar crafted by Brian Huang, owner of Beach House Chocolate Shop in Santa Cruz, California, US. The company told the Guinness World Records website the bar was worth more than £10,000 (Dh37,580) but the organisers are yet to confirm the figure. What are the obstacles? Guinness World Records says the record holder was beaten this year after Justin Lee, president of the Montego Bay Hotel and Casino, declared the record to be officially broken. "It is a great achievement, especially as all other contestants used factory-made ingredients with standard recipes - no recipes are allowed," said Mr Lee. Image copyright AP Image caption The Montego Bay Hotel and Casino is hosting the competition this year "I am however confident that we will be able to beat this year's record, as the standard recipe we are using uses more of a natural ingredient than the factory-made ones did." "Not a cake contest" He told the BBC that the rules have changed, with competitors required to bake their concoction in a specially designed oven and measure the results. Mr Lee said that if the chosen recipe was deemed to be unsafe or unhygienic, another would be given a chance to beat it. While the rules for the competition say it is "not a cake contest", Mr Lee said the organizers would be willing to consider it, depending on whether the recipe needs additional ingredients. With entries being received until 17 December and the scheduled judging taking place on Saturday morning, he said it was "just a matter of time" before the chocolate bar is confirmed to be crowned the record holder. He was also keen to dispel the impression that winning the competition would be "a prize for life". "It's not a prize for life. The record will be broken again and again. It's a
