The new in-game engine represents a significant upgrade to the game's physics engine and provides many new benefits for players, including new collision models, more realistic general ball physics, better ball spin, improved player reactions to dribbling and ball control, and better AI. Player movements in the pitch are now more convincing and believable, and tackling mechanics are much more impactful. Physically-based Shading Physically-based Shading (PBS) is a rendering technique that uses physically-based methods to simulate the way light interacts with objects in real life in order to bring a video game experience to life. Since this rendering technology is based on real-world physics, fans will get more accurate representations of the way objects react and feel in the environment. The addition of advanced light and weather systems, combined with PBS, will enable a much more realistic lighting and atmosphere in The Journey, FIFA, FIFA 2K, FIFA 19 and FIFA 20. Improved CPU and GPU Performance Today, the majority of GPU, CPU and memory are still being used by big teams in the same way as the old console versions, despite evolving gaming and graphics hardware. Their games need a lot of data to be sent from the CPU and main memory to the GPU, with the data constantly being updated and buffered before the render. FIFA 22 has four CPU/GPU independent texture caches as well as four graphic memory caches, which not only further improve CPU and GPU performance, but also allow more textures to be rendered in the game. Furthermore, the game can now render regions of the map and draw stars, with dynamic lighting enabled, using photorealistic rendering. Ongoing Improvements FIFA 22 is slated for release in November 2018. We'll continue updating our blog with in-depth technical information about the new features and improvements in FIFA 22. FIFA is also the world's most played sports video game franchise, with over 300 million players to date. FIFA 20 just ended, and it was the biggest year ever for the series. As the global e-sports events of the year drew to a close, the teams behind the scenes set their sights on taking the series to new heights in FIFA 21. culmination of a journey of discovery for senior producer Jon Champion. Who was Jon Champion, before he became the face of FIFA? We grew up with the game I started working in video games in the late 1990s, when football was probably the least fashionable of sports. It felt like a big, lumbering juggernaut of a genre, dominated by Punch-Out!!, Simpsons and Super Mario World. I never got the chance to play any real football, but I did want to own a football game in my own home. I spent a long time trying to find the one I wanted. I wasn't quite sure what I wanted. All I knew is that I would have a football game on my shelf when I finally started buying games for myself. That's all I really wanted from a football game. Why is that such an unlikely goal for a teenager in the late 90s? At first, all games seemed to have two properties: they looked amazing and you could shoot things in the air. You could do tricks like this. I was 15 years old at the time, and I just wasn't getting it. I bought a SNES that year and had Mario Kart on it. For years, I didn't really have anything more than that in terms of my games. In the early 2000s, this "look good, shoot things" genre of games exploded. We had Super Mario 64 and
