currently the "path display" option in visio is not working properly. when creating a diagram, the user is asked for a starting point and the diagram then displays all of the waypoints of the route. the user is then asked if the route is correct or incorrect. if incorrect, the user is given the ability to change the route. this is all working correctly except when creating a custom start point, the user is not able to leave the start point by clicking on anyplace on the screen. this is not a problem in keynote, only in visio. visio does not appear to be remembering the last saved file. if i were to make a change to the file and save, then if i reload the file, the change that i made is still there. if i restart visio, the changes are not there. the switch shapes in our electrical stencils for visio each contains an action menu to open and close the switch. the actual way this is done internally depends upon the complexity of the switch and what seemed the best at the time, either multiple shapes within a group, then make these shapes visible/invisible depending on the switch state, or multiple shape geometry sections, making these sections visible or invisible; or, a third method, changing the coordinates of a shapes depending on the required switch state, this results in a simpler shape but it does complicate the calculations required, harder to get right and keep right. 3d visioner 2013 is a professional 3d presentation program for visio and will enable you to view, create and edit shapes in 3d. you can place or move 3d shapes and use the built-in tools to easily design your 3d models. with 3d visioner you can work with 3d models of any type (2d, 3d, 2d+3d, network, visualizations) and with any 3d model
