The moisture control measures needed to treat mold infestations can be better served by managing the other environmental factors that promote mold growth, such as temperature, humidity, ventilation, and materials, than by treating mold itself [ 29 ].

Air Conditioning

In both the United States and the European Union, indoor air temperatures are regulated by law to stay between 22°C and 26°C (71°F and 77°F). The US codes cover spaces of 5,000 square meters (54,000 square feet) or less. The EU standard covers all indoor spaces, regardless of size [ 30 ]. In both the EU and the US, building codes require ventilation systems with a minimum volume of 20 cubic meters per person for a maximum of 15 people at once [ 31 ].

The following charts show the recommended minimum ventilation rates to maintain a desired temperature range Surface Wood Wood is one of the primary sources of mold and fungus spores [ 32 ]. Long-term exposure to moisture can cause wood to rot, affecting the health and function of structures in which it is used [ 33 ]. To prevent this, care should be taken to protect walls and beams that are subject to moisture, such as any exterior sheathing or insulation immediately above exterior basement walls or external window walls. In addition, surrounding soil should be graded away from the sides of the structure so that standing water cannot collect. If moisture is present in a structure, a rain gutter should be fitted to direct it away from the foundation. [ 34 ] Finally, if rain gutters are not present, a properly installed sump pump should divert water that falls during rain storms. Concrete Concrete is a porous material that easily retains moisture and makes a good home for mold and bacteria [ 35 ].

The best way to keep molds and the like from growing in your walls or in the concrete of a building is to drain moisture from the foundation and to insulate the walls so that they don't act like sponges for moisture. [ 36 ] Water As with moisture control, removing standing water from a house or building is the best way to prevent mold growth [ 37 ]. Any open areas of damp surfaces should be filled with masonry or concrete and ridged. [ 38 ] This will help prevent the development of a rain garden.

Protective/Damp Rainshading Shelter:

Basic foundation wall and roof:

Resistance to moisture flow: Water

drainage: Damp Rainshade: Moisture

retention under tiles or concrete: Use of standing water to warm the home:

Ultimately, on the planet's surface, the crackers had no choice but to dig a massive hole in the ground, excavate, and then backfill the hole in an attempt to cover the crack. [ 27 ] This was another risky move as the surface microbe count increased and the C.E.C. was forced to reduce the concentration of DNA sent into the atmosphere, which then led to an even higher microbe count, which led to greater water infiltration that made the process even more perilous and costly. To fix the situation, the crackers were forced to alter the planet's atmosphere to make it more like Earth's.
